PROTESTS ERUPT IN MILWAUKEE AFTER POLICE KILL ARMED SUSPECT

In a poor, predominantly black neighborhood of Milwaukee fired gunshots, hurled bricks and set a gas station on fire on Saturday night after a patrol officer fatally shot an armed suspect there, authorities said. Police did not disclose the race of the suspect or the officer involved in the shooting, which occurred Saturday afternoon in Sherman Park. A statement by the Milwaukee Police Department did not name the suspect but said he was 23 years old, had a lengthy arrest record and was carrying a stolen handgun loaded with 23 rounds of ammunition when police pulled over the vehicle for unspecified "suspicious activity." REUTERS

POLICE OFFICER KILLED IN GEORGIA RESPONDING TO EMERGENCY CALL

2 A police officer was fatally shot while responding to a call about a suspicious person near an intersection in southern Georgia, police said Sunday. Officer Tim Smith, 31, was called to a neighborhood in Eastman Georgia, a small city about 130 miles south of Atlanta, at about 9:30 p.m. Saturday, the Georgia Bureau of Investigation said in a statement. Smith arrived at the area and encountered an individual, the statement said. "Officer Smith exited his patrol car to investigate and was shot by the individual," it said. Smith returned gunfire, but the suspect fled the scene. The officer was transported to a local hospital, where he died. The Georgia Bureau of Investigation is seeking tips to identify and find the assailant. It did not release information about a possible motive for the attack. REUTERS

LOCHTE ROBBED IN TAXI HOLDUP AFTER LEAVING PARTY, USOC SAYS

3 U.S. gold medal swimmer Ryan Lochte and three teammates were robbed in a taxi holdup by men posing as armed police officers, the United States Olympic Committee confirmed on Sunday. "According to four members of the U.S. Olympic Swimming Team [Gunnar Bentz, Jack Conger, Jimmy Feigen and Ryan Lochte], they left France House early Sunday morning in a taxi headed for the Olympic Village," USOC spokesman Patrick Sandusky said. "Their taxi was stopped by individuals posing as armed police officers who demanded the athletes' money and other personal belongings. All four athletes are safe and cooperating with authorities." REUTERS

RELIEF AHEAD?

Smoldering heat and stifling humidity have blanketed the East Coast from Washington to Philadelphia to New York City. Boston has been on the edge, but got your big dose this past weekend.

Philadelphia and New York City will continue to feel the excessive heat today, just a notch lower in humidity, for the fourth day in a row, while Boston will barely escape topping the 90-degree mark.

In Philadelphia, there have been three heat-related deaths during this latest heat wave, along with many reports of heat lightning — vivid flashes of lightening, glowing skies on the horizon, without rain or hearing thunder because the storms are too far away.

The smoldering heat should start to lift as we move into the second half of this week. A potent frontal system will start to close in by late Tuesday and Wednesday morning, and this will set up a severe storm threat, with localized flooding possible by Tuesday night into Wednesday morning.

The 90-degree heat train should start to derail by Thursday and eventually computer models are suggesting, with mixed signals, a significant break in heat and humidity by the coming weekend. The European model is indicating that we stay on the hot and humid side with other models suggesting a big break.

Bolaris' Weather Watch

I'm sure your local TV meteorologists will keep you updated as long as you can sit through hours of teases, such as "When will the heat break ... possible severe storms ... we will let you know when ... will the heat last into your weekend ... flooding rains possible ... five day forecast ahead ... 10-day outlook coming ... stay right there ... don't move. Sorry, just having a little fun, must be the heat! The good news is the tropics remain quiet as we start to move into

Luna with 3-year-old Milton Tejada Jr. CARRENO FAMILY

Revere family searches for autistic son's missing 'support' parrot

$2,000 reward being offered for Luna, who was last spotted behind the town's fire department.

CHRIS CAESAR
@MetroBOS
chris.caesar@metro.us

A Revere family is desperately searching for its pet parrot, Luna, after the brightly colored bird flew away while the family was preparing for its move to a new home last month.

The loss is especially painful because Luna was more than just a companion. Betsy Carreno said her 3-year-old son, Milton Tejada Jr., was diagnosed with autism at a young age and often found comfort — and some new interests — through his relationship with Luna, who was part of the family before he was even born.

Carreno said the bird acted as an “emotional support” to Milton and the rest of her family. Cageless, the bird often sat on her or her husband Milton's shoulders, helping the younger Milton to make eye contact and look at faces.

Forgoing a cage meant Luna could fly around the house, often to Milton's wondrous amusement, Carreno said.

The pet also taught Milton some other lessons you might not expect from a bird.

“Luna would eat the same food that my son ate, which would sometimes help him try new food,” Carreno said.

And not bird seed, either: Grapes, chocolate milk and juice were all in the mix.

Carreno said Milton now is clearly distressed by his pal's absence, with the family continuing its search every day to find any sign of the beloved animal.

“He has a routine: Every day he checks that everything [at home] is like how he left it before he went to school,” Carreno said of her son. “He discovers something wrong very quickly.”

The bird flew off July 25, when the family was preparing to move to a new home nearby. Milton's father, Milton Sr., was carrying some trash with Luna on his shoulder. A sudden sound spooked the bird, who jumped off Milton and flew out of the house.

Carreno said the family has canvassed their neighborhood every day, plastering posters throughout the Greater Boston area offering a $2,000 reward to anyone who helps find Luna.

“This parrot means the world to my autistic son,” the flier reads. “Please, please, please help us to find it.”

A 2014 study by the Research Center for Human-Animal Interaction found that all kinds of pets may act as “social lubricants” that help children learn to communicate better and demonstrate more social assertiveness.

“When I compared the social skills of children with autism who lived with dogs to those who did not, the children with dogs appeared to have greater social skills,” Gretchen Carlisle, research fellow at the Research Center for Human-Animal Interaction at University of Missouri, wrote in the findings of the study she headed.

“More significantly, however, the data revealed that children with any kind of pet in the home reported being more likely to engage in behaviors such as introducing themselves, asking for information, or responding to other people's questions.”

Carreno said the family is still holding out hope: Luna was last spotted Wednesday, Aug. 10, behind the Revere Fire Department on Broadway and Central Avenue.

“The person [who saw her] was very close to Luna, but she flew [away] again,” Carreno said.

If you spot Luna, you can call (857) 445-3873, text (857) 756-2134, or email 3112milton@gmail.com.

Which are Boston's most flowery neighborhoods?

The lucky inhabitants of one Boston-area town received the priciest bouquets, with their flower deliveries averaging just north of $95.

JASON NUCKOLLS
@MetroNewYork

A report has analyzed Bostonians' flower-buying trends, revealing which neighborhoods are the biggest spenders and most popular recipients of flowers.

The report, released by real estate search site RentHop, reviewed data from August 2014 to July 2016 from Florist.com and found that the most flower-empowered areas can be found around the city's outskirts.

Peabody ranked first when it came to spending big on flowers, with ZIP code 01960 spending $1,879 on Florist.com arrangements during the past two years. The same ZIP code also had the most flowers delivered, receiving $2,060 worth of flowers in the same two-year timespan.

Other big spenders on flowers included Malden and South Boston, which spent $1,629 and $1,486, respectively, according to RentHop. When it came to receiving bouquets, Fenway/Kenmore and Woburn were second and third behind Peabody, which each received upward of $1,650 worth of arrangements.

Some neighborhoods' residents like to go big when they send flowers, and those who live in Back Bay's 02199 ZIP code sent the most expensive arrangements, averaging around $103 each, RentHop added. The lucky inhabitants of Littleton received the priciest bouquets, with their flower deliveries averaging just north of $95.

Trump rails against press in response to reports of chaos

Speaking for more than an hour in a sweltering room, Trump spent a significant portion of his speech complaining about the media.

Republican presidential candidate Donald Trump GETTY IMAGES

Republican Donald Trump on Saturday repeated his attack on President Barack Obama claiming he helped "found" Islamic State and railed against media reports that his campaign is failing at a rally in Connecticut, a state in which he has a long-shot of being victorious.

He again threatened to revoke the press credentials of The New York Times. The credentials allow reporters access to press-only areas of his campaign events. He has already banned other outlets, including the Washington Post.

On Saturday, the Times newspaper published an article detailing failed efforts to make Trump focus his campaign on the general election.

"These are the most dishonest people," Trump said. "Maybe we'll start thinking about taking their press credentials away from them."

Trump visiting Connecticut, a heavily Democratic state, raised eyebrows among many Republicans.

"It's asinine that he would be in Connecticut holding a public rally less than 90 days before the election," said Republican strategist Matt Mackowiak. "You don't see Hillary publicly campaigning in Idaho and Mississippi. I have to think this proves the candidate is running the campaign, which explains why it's such a disaster of biblical proportions."

At several points the crowd chanted "lock her up," a frequent campaign rally chant in reference to Trump's Democratic rival, Hillary Clinton.

Trump told the crowd that normally he responds by saying he intends instead to defeat her in the Nov. 8 election, but this time added, "You know what? You have a point!"

Trump also dropped his recent efforts to say he was not being serious when he said Obama was the "founder" of the Islamic State militant group.

"It's the opinion of myself and a lot of people that he was the founder," Trump told the crowd.

Democrats and Republicans alike have criticized Trump's assertion as patently false.

Trump took a detour from attacking Clinton's economic record to discuss the 1998 scandal involving White House intern Monica Lewinsky and President Bill Clinton, whom Republicans attempted to drive out of office over the affair. REUTERS

New video in Johnny Depp divorce drama

Is Johnny Depp out of control? According to a new video, it looks like the answer might be yes.

Just after a hearing on Amber Heard's abuse allegations against her estranged husband was delayed, TMZ published footage that allegedly precedes a May 21 incident in which the actress, 30, claims Depp hit her. The video appears to show Depp yelling, cursing and smashing a wine glass and bottle. Depp, 53, also appears to be trying to take Heard's phone from her, TMZ reports. Heard has she did not leak the video. Though the tape has been submitted as evidence in the couple's divorce case, it may not be admissible in court — sources have told TMZ that the video was "heavily edited" and shows that Depp was unaware he was being recorded.

Justin Bieber sticks up for Sofia Richie

When it comes to his girlfriends, Justin Bieber doesn't mess around.

This week, the 22-year-old singer was seen cozying up to Sofia Richie, singer Lionel Richie's daughter, in Japan. Since then, the two have made their relationship "Instagram official," posting numerous photos of each other on both their social media pages.

But Beliebers don't seem too happy with this new relationship — according to Bieber's latest Instagram post, his fans have been "mean" to his 17-year-old companion, criticizing her for her looks and posting other nasty comments on each photo.

Bieber retaliated against his 77.6 million Instagram followers by posting another photo of the two and threatening to make his account private. "I'm gonna make my Instagram private if you guys don't stop the hate this is getting out of hand, if you guys are really fans you wouldn't be so mean to people that I like," the caption reads.

Who knew the Biebs was such a loyal guy? To all Beliebers: It's not too late to say "sorry" and keep his Instagram public!

Demi Lovato issues apology over Zika joke

The latest fete for Demi Lovato was on Twitter — it was called the #DemiLovatoIsOverParty.

Fans clapped back at the "Cool for the Summer" singer after she posted — and then deleted — a Snapchat video in which the pop star, 23, is heard laughing after her mom, Dianna Hart, joked about the Olympics in Rio De Janeiro. "Everybody down in Rio gonna get the Zika virus," Hart says. Fans responded to the insensitive joke with the hashtag #DemiLovatoIsOver. The singer deleted the video and tweeted an apology Saturday.

"I was laughing at how Southern my mom sounded, not the issue at hand. Deepest apologies."

Lovato could have stopped there — but, of course, she didn't. "I ain't goin nowhere b—s," she wrote in one tweet. "It's an awesome feeling when you're so content with life and yourself that hate doesn't effect [sic] you ... Feelin' good y'all," she wrote in another.

Chris Brown wins big in custody battle

Chris Brown's court battle with ex Nia Guzman has finally come to a conclusion — and it isn't too pretty for Guzman.

The former model filed papers against Brown in April, alleging the 27-year-old rapper was unfit to care for their daughter, Royalty, without supervision. Guzman's request for full custody was denied by a Californian judge. She also struck out on every other request in the case, including requests to increase child support, to have Brown's visits monitored and to have him drug-tested, TMZ reports.

The judge also ordered Guzman to repay $20,000 in legal fees Brown was forced to provide so she could afford a lawyer.

Brown will maintain joint custody of their daughter and will receive his mandated 12 days of visitation every month — it looks like the grass was definitely greener on Brown's side of the battle.

Single and Sciping

Laurie Davis Edwards is the founder of eFlirt, an online dating concierge service, and the best-selling author of "Love @ First Click: The Ultimate Guide to Online Dating."

How to not ghost (and say no instead)

One of my clients recently admitted she only messages men online who she "thinks will be a good date." When we explored this decision-making, we discovered that she selects like this so she won't have to turn down a second date. The confrontation is too uncomfortable for her.

This isn't the first time I've heard a client voice an aversion to saying no. In a swipe-based world, there is so much access to singles, which means everyone is dating more people. And that means more no's are necessary too. But turning down others doesn't feel good — it's why some people ghost.

There are different types of no's. They happen in the message

Think confrontation is uncomfortable? Here's how to let them down easy. ISTOCK

you might send the person you haven't met yet (No, I'm not interested in meeting you), the text you may type when someone asks you out again (No, I don't want to see you again), and the conversation you could have with someone you've been seeing (No, you're not the one for me).

These conversations aren't quite breakups but feel nearly as uncomfortable. Here's how to say no in every scenario: Make a s—t sandwich. Put the bad news in between two incredible thoughts so you honor what you had by acknowledging the good. Don't use just any bread—think of it as homemade rosemary focaccia, not basic store-bought. The more specific the thought for the slices, the less cliché it will feel.

Here's how to make the sandwich:

Lead with gratitude

Tell your match what you appreciate about him or her. It might be a compliment or an acknowledgement of what you shared.

Say no and tell them why

Throw the s—t in the sandwich and include a reason why. It should be genuine but not too specific so they don't beat themselves up over it later.

End with respect

Show genuine care by telling them you respect them. When the person feels like you understand them, they'll feel less slighted by the experience.

Hopefully your first s—t sandwich will be your last.

Hugh Grant spars with Queen Meryl

The actor confesses to being terrified of working with the legend on "Florence Foster Jenkins."

MATT PRIGGE
@mattprigge
matt.prigge@metro.us

Hugh Grant heard about Florence Foster Jenkins in school. A society lady from the 1940s, she became instantly notorious as the world's worst singer, her hilariously awful recordings compiled on albums — or, in Grant's case, passed around on cassettes. Now the actor, 55, is in "Florence Foster Jenkins," in which he plays the scheming husband to the singer, played by Meryl Streep — a task he found understandably terrifying.

Listening to Jenkins' recordings, there comes a point where you start to feel bad for laughing at this woman who really thought she could sing — and, rather, couldn't. That's the genius of the film, really — to take something that's fundamentally hilarious and then go into the humanity of it. That's something [director] Stephen Frears is quite good at: disorienting audiences over which genre you're in or how you're supposed to feel or what the tone is.

You've said you were pretty scared to act with Meryl Streep. I had a year between signing up and starting it, and I didn't know how to contend with these terrors I had. I'd wake in the middle of the night saying, "F—, I've got to do emotional scenes with Meryl Streep." [Laughs]

What did you do to cope? I found that researching the character kind of helped with soothing my nerves. I've never been so well-prepared. I went through the script with a tooth-comb about five times, asking, "Why do I say this? Why do I pick up that prop?" It was Stanislavski taken to extremes — and probably entirely futile.

In what sense? In the sense that I'm not sure that actually makes any difference to one's performance. But it soothes you. It makes you think, "I've built my house on rock, not sand."

It sounds like Method acting. Well, it's strangely

Hugh Grant plays St. Clair Bayfield, husband and yes-man to a deluded society lady (Meryl Streep) unaware she can't sing in "Florence Foster Jenkins." PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Method-y for an English actor. But what I've found over the years is that in the debate between English and American acting, when it comes to film, I think the Americans are right and we're wrong. You know that old boring story of Laurence Olivier and Dustin Hoffman? [Ed. On "Marathon Man," Hoffman stayed up all night to look haggard for a scene. Olivier said, "Why don't you try acting?"] English actors like to tell each other that story. Well, I think they're wrong. I think Method-ing is quite right. And there's no greater example than Meryl.

How Method would she go? On days when it was happy scenes, she would turn up happy. Days of sad scenes, she'd turn up sad. And if it was an angry scene, she'd turn up angry. I was never sure on set if I was talking to Meryl or Florence. I used to call her "Floryl."

What is it like acting with an angry Meryl Streep? Very, very, extremely frightening. She doesn't come at you yelling, but you can tell there's a simmering rage.

How do you overcome the kind of fear that comes with this film? Half of you wants to run away, and half of you says you can't. If you run away, you'll never forgive yourself. Once you get through it, you do feel significantly smugger.

10 THINGS TO DO

ART MART

Two Bostonians have launched a small maker retail refuge in Newmarket.

CARLY OLSON
@carlyolson28
carlyolson@metro.us

Cait Danahy and Pat Dagle are no strangers to the Boston art scene. Since they were college students in Boston, they've created contemporary galleries that—on a student budget—still became the talk of the town. Now the pair runs Casablanc, a contemporary gallery space in Boston, and Blanc Agency, a branding and graphic design firm.

Their newest endeavor is Market at Casablanc, which leases studio and retail space to artists and makers. It also helps unite the small art community in Boston. More than a dozen studio-storefronts—ranging from photography studios to streetwear vendors—reside under Market's roof. With sporadic bursts of palm-tree wallpaper and neon accents, the space looks like it belongs in retro Miami than in Boston's Newmarket neighborhood.

A rare haven for Boston-based artists
Danahy admits that it's difficult to make money as an artist in Boston, so many creatives pack their bags for New York or Los Angeles in what she describes as "the artist's pilgrimage." Market provides Boston's missing link—an affordable space for artists to produce and sell their work. "Seeing all of our friends interested in art and design moving away was the last piece of the puzzle," Danahy says.

Paige Mulhern, an illustrative painter managing the creative team at the Best Bees Co., a full-service beekeeping company that maintains hives for businesses and homes, says renting studio space at Market was a natural next step for her career.

Mulhern agrees that it can be difficult to "make it" as an artist in Boston. Many of her classmates from MassArt have already embarked on the artist's pilgrimage. After hearing about the concept for Market, it was an easy sell. "I knew it was just what I needed to stay in Boston," Mulhern says.

Mulhern notes that if all of the creatives leave, a strong art community in Boston can never find its footing. "Sticking around is essential to making it happen," Mulhern says.

Collaboration is key

The community of makers at Market—albeit carefully curated—also mutually benefit from one another's skills and products. When selecting new tenants for the space, Danahy thinks about what media are missing or who would work well together.

The accessibility to other makers intrinsic in Market's model makes collaboration happen organically and fluidly—one shop can stock their goods in another's storefront or the in-house photographer can shoot the latest collection for a shop down the hall.

Brothers Artisan Oil, housed next door to Mulhern's studio space, always needs wax to make its beard-tamer balm, and thanks to Best Bees Co., Mulhern has easy access to it. "They want local wax, and I have lots of wax that I don't know what to do with," Mulhern says with a laugh. And Craft & Caro—the retailer of luxury men's goods—stocks Brothers' products in its space 100 yards away.

A new type of "mall"

For the consumer, Danahy explains, there is value in seeing where products are made and getting the chance to interact with the maker. She notes that shopping for something unique and local overrules the chain-store convenience for many young people.

"There is a shift away from chain stores and globalized marketing," Danahy says. "Our generation cares more about where our things come from."

Danahy and Dagle have aimed to maneuver these obstacles into Market—something that mutually benefits Boston artists looking to sell their work and an eager consumer base that seeks out unique products but doesn't know where to find them.

Market's innovative concept seems to be hitting the right notes. Tenants express a pal-

Wonderful, awkward, poetic

Bridge Repertory Theater's "Dog Paddle" is delightfully odd.

JEREMY D. GOODWIN
letters@metro.us

Twenty-six-year-old theater impresario Guy Ben-Aharon has made a stir on the Boston scene. Born in Israel, he moved to the United States at age 9, but has held fast to his international perspective. After founding Israeli Stage, a troupe dedicated to plays by Israeli authors, he was asked to spin off projects dedicated to works from Switzerland, Germany, France, Austria and Scandinavia.

Now, the feisty young company Bridge Repertory Theater of Boston is getting in on the act, bringing in Ben-Aharon to direct the U.S. premiere of "Dog Paddle (Or, Struggling Inelegantly Against Drowning)" by Reto Finger, a Swiss playwright who has won awards at home but barely ever been produced stateside. Written in sometimes-eerie blank verse, the delightfully odd (but funny) play starts with a couple's breakup and looks at the coping skills that come into play when one of them takes up residence in the basement, becoming a sort of 21st century Bartleby.

It seems like you've built a cottage industry around non-American plays.

Guy Ben-Aharon: The thing I'm interested in most is the cross-cultural dialogue between a foreign playwright and American audiences, and finding out what we can we learn from these cultural bridges. That's my mission in life.

The thing I find so frustrating and tragic is that theater, against the commission to be a progressive art form, in this country is so backward and so isolated. We rarely ever see anybody producing a foreign play in some kind of major way. And if it's foreign, it's Irish or British. I love that Bridge Rep is doing this, because they're taking a chance.

There was something quite wonderful about the idea of doing a show about younger characters. I think a lot of our big life decisions are made when you're in

HOW TO GET AHEAD

Helping kids comprehend election chaos

A new program helps educators and parents teach kids about civics and campaigning.

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

The 2016 presidential election has been highly unconventional, to say the least. Making sense of it ourselves can be tricky — so how to explain it to our kids?

This week, the Newseum in Washington is launching "Election 2016: Stumped? Making Sense of Campaign Chaos," a free online program designed to help parents and educators sift through campaign questions with kids.

"It feels so very different from previous election cycles, but also particularly for educators, who might be stumped on how to bring this controversial content into the classroom and be able to lead students through a productive debate about what it means for our democracy and what it means for them," says Anna Kassinger, curriculum manager at the Newseum.

The program, made up of 11 case studies, is geared toward middle and high school students. Here are a few highlights:

Address "third rail" feelings

Each case study centers on a critical debate question, such as "Is the system fair?" or "Why are there so many candidates?" Election essentials, such as eyewitness accounts of historical events, provide the context kids need to figure out how our system got to where it is today, explains Kassinger, who calls the fears and concerns specific to this election cycle "third rail" feelings—in other words, seemingly too hot to touch. Yes, these topics may strike a political nerve — but what hasn't thus far?

Don't shy away from social studies

Social media's profound influence on presidential campaigns — for better or worse — is chronicled in a case study titled "Social Media Swirl." In it, kids explore the social nature of campaigns throughout history, from the aptly named social clubs that supported Andrew Jackson, to the digital turning point of Howard Dean's campaign to our present-day social media saturation.

Tap into kids' curiosity

Tapping into what matters to adolescents and teens can pique their curiosity and help them better understand their role in a democracy. Kassinger says certain questions are resonating with younger people, including: "Why, at this point, are we inundated with ugly attack ads? Do they have an effect? Do they serve the electorate? The civics part of this — why is it that we have so many protests, usually led by youth, and why are passions running so high?"

Are 'microdegrees' the future of education?

They're increasingly popular. But can they get you a job?

ALIZAH SALARIO
@Alirosa
alizah.salario@metro.us

We live in tiny houses, make micropayments and use mini-fridges. Naturally, now we can also earn "microcredentials."

As the name suggests, microcredentials qualify individuals to execute specific skills, often in the fields of math, science and technology. They're earned in far less time than traditional degrees — and for a fraction of the cost.

Haven't heard of microcredentials? Then take note, because these bite-size degrees are gaining traction. They're also giving traditional degree programs stiff competition, according to a 2015 paper from the Brookings Institution.

This is particularly true in the tech sector, where "skills-based certifications already have a long track record," said Alex Halavais, director of the master's of art in social technologies program at Arizona State University.

"Certain parts of the tech sector have traditionally valued practical skills over broader education," said Halavais in an email.

However, the question remains: Can a microcredential get you a job?

Most Udacity students are working professionals with a college degree. ISTOCK

Program details

Udacity, one of the largest microcredential providers, offers its exclusive nanodegree courses for $200/month.

Salwa Muhammad, vice president for student services at Udacity, said that the program is "about bridging the gap and bringing education and jobs to everyone, regardless of where you are in the world or what situation you're in."

Udacity educators partner with tech companies (Intel, Google, and AT&T, for instance) to create project-based curriculums for nanodegrees like front-end web developer, Android basics, and — coming soon — a self-driving car engineer program. Students develop a portfolio over the course of the program, which generally takes six to nine months. Then they can then show off their work to those very same companies that collaborated on their curriculum — and hopefully get hired. The majority of Udacity students have college degrees and are working professionals.

Employment prospects

Though it's not yet clear how marketable microcredentials are to employers outside these partnerships (they're still relatively new), they are leveling the playing field by making training more accessible.

"Udacity's nanodegrees, and programs like them, are providing an exciting and effective alternative to training programs that were often ineffective and expensive for students," said Halavais.

But it's important not to confuse training with an education.

"There is no question that the traditional bachelor's degree, from a reputable institution, remains the gold standard across industries. A microdegree can help differentiate a candidate whether or not they have a traditional four-year degree — but it's no substitute."

With Brady suspended, Patriots running backs reason for concern

The group lacks a true headliner as the 2016 season approaches.

JAMES TOSCANO
@Jimmy_Toscano
sports@metro.us

If you're looking for something to be concerned about with this year's Patriots team, look no further than its running back corps.

The Patriots have always been a pass-first team with Tom Brady as quarterback, but now that he's missing the first four games, the quarterback duties go to Jimmy Garoppolo.

With a top-tier running back to take 25-plus carries a game, this wouldn't be as big of a deal.

But the Patriots don't have one of those to bail them out if need be. That means Garoppolo can expect to throw the ball plenty as the Patriots will continue to make due with who they have running the ball.

That isn't to say that there is no skill at the position — there is — but whether or not LeGarrette Blount and Dion Lewis can stay healthy is the question.

As it stands, Blount, whose 2015 season was shortened due to a hip injury, is back on the field for the Patriots. Lewis tore his ACL last November, and is still on the PUP list.

The locks

LeGarrette Blount, Dion Lewis, Brandon Bolden

Is Blount the sexy back that will juke and jive his way to 120 rushing yards a game? No. He's a north-south back that isn't afraid to use his body to forge ahead for yardage. And while the Patriots don't ask him to carry it 25 times a game, he has shown that he can take the bulk of the carries when the game plan calls for it. Blount loves playing in New England and he's back on a one-year deal.

As long as he can stay on the field, he'll be a big asset.

The 5-foot-8 Lewis is anything but big physically, but his impact on the team in his first season in New England was massive. According to Pro Football Focus, Lewis created an NFL-best .39 missed tackles per attempt in 2015, on his way to 234 rushing yards, 388 receiving yards, and four combined touchdowns in seven games. How will he look once he returns from the injury? His quickness and elusiveness are his biggest assets, but the mental hurdle is often times as hard to overcome as the physical.

Bolden stepped in during a time of need last season, but really makes his mark on special teams for the Patriots.

Everybody else

James White, Donald Brown, James Develin, DJ Foster,

Tyler Gaffney, Joey Iosefa
There are some out there who don't think White will crack the Patriots' roster out of camp. But when called upon he's been ready. He had 10 receptions for 115 yards and a TD in Week 13 against the Eagles. And he made a nice 56-yard catch and run last Thursday against the Saints. Another running back who shined against the Saints was Tyler Gaffney. Gaffney has been on the team since 2014, but hasn't been able to get off injured reserve. He's off it now, and made sure everybody knew it with a 44-yard touchdown run.

"He's there early, he stays late, never complains, always does extra," Belichick said of Gaffney, "and so it's great to see him have an opportunity this year ... happy for him, happy that he's out there and got through the game and can just keep building on [Thursday's] performance."

Phelps leaves Olympic pool but not the sport

Michael Phelps left the Olympic pool for the last time on Saturday having fulfilled a childhood dream, but it is clear he will not be walking away from the sport that has turned him into a global household name.

Phelps' swimming career ended with his 23rd gold medal in the 4x100 medley relay on Saturday, which extended his record as the most decorated Olympian of all time.

"This all started and began with one little dream as a kid that changed the sport of swimming and tried to do something nobody else has ever done," said Phelps. "And it turned out pretty cool."

It could have all ended four years ago, a little less cool, for the now 31-year-old.

After the 2012 London Olympics, which he had declared to be his last, Phelps walked away with not only the regret that he simply went through the motions but like many athletes in retirement, he appeared lost and unprepared.

He talked of becoming a professional golfer but eventually found himself testing the waters of a swimming comeback and despite some missteps with a drink driving conviction that led to rehab and a suspension, made his fifth Olympic team.

In Rio, where he took his Olympic tally to a staggering 28 medals — he also won three silvers and two bronze — it was apparent he was not going through the motions at all.

Clearly exhausted, he shared every victory with the raucous crowd and was especially emotional whenever he caught sight of fiancée Nicole and infant son Boomer in the stands.

"Getting off the bus

Michael Phelps is adamant he's competed in his final Olympics. GETTY IMAGES walking into the pool tonight I almost felt myself starting to cry," said Phelps. Last warmup, last time putting on a suit, last time walking out in front of thousands of people representing my country. It's insane.

Going Mainstream

Part of that new chapter, having stated numerous times he would not be competing in Tokyo in 2020, now clearly lies outside the pool.

Since he first took the Olympic plunge at the 2000 Sydney Games he has had an ambition to take swimming into the mainstream and there is no doubt the sport has enjoyed a much higher profile during his tenure as its leading figure.

It is also apparent, however, he has not been able to elevate it much beyond what it has been — something people only care about during Olympic years and he knows he has work to do.

"I've said this to some of you, it's not done growing," he told reporters when he qualified for Rio. "In my opinion, and if I have to die before — I'll go down swinging to see this sport where I want it to be.

While he does not have to put himself through the daily grind of training, it seems almost certain that Phelps' next career involves continuing to try to boost the sport's profile.

"Michael may not be competing anymore but he is still going to be very involved in the sport," said team mate Ryan Murphy.

"He started his own swim line, I think he is going to continue to try to grow that, there's not going to be an event he's not going to be at.

"Maybe he will get into commentating, maybe he will find some other business venture he can get involved in but he's not going to be out of the sport." STEVE HEATING, REUTERS

Aries Refuse to let your emotions cause you to make an impromptu decision regarding your position. Protect your assets, income, reputation and belongings.

Taurus Take a moment to rethink your current position. You can get ahead, but if you want to make a change, do so for the right reason. Personal improvements will turn out well.

Gemini If you take time to engage in activities with children, friends or elders, the interest you show will help overcome a disgruntled individual looking for a fight. Promote peace, not discord.

Cancer Good things are heading your way. Children will give you a different perspective on a current partnership or your lifestyle. An opportunity will come through an unusual source.

Leo Being practical and analytical will help you prepare for what's to come. Make your plans early and stick to them in order to excel in what you do.

Virgo Get busy doing something enjoyable, spending time with children or teaching someone new skills. Helping others will in turn help you. Romance is highlighted.

Libra Bring about changes that will help you feel better about yourself and your surroundings. An emotional situation is best dealt with immediately. Do what's best for you.

Scorpio Find out where you stand so that you can move forward. Discuss your plans and initiate what you want to see happen. Short trips, communication and romance are featured.

Sagittarius Organization will be necessary if you want to accomplish anything. Don't be led astray by the actions or words of others. Travel and communication will be problematic.

Capricorn Reconnect with someone you have lost touch with. It will help put your life in perspective if you review the past. Romance will have an impact on a personal relationship.

Aquarius Work with, not against, the general consensus. It will be much easier to get your way after you gain acceptance. Concentrate on personal gains and updates.

Pisces If you are an instigator, you will gain control and convince others to help your plans instead of hindering them. Honesty and precision will be your ticket to success. EUGENIA LAST
